A suggestion of the Day. It is twenty years since Lee surrendered at Appointtox. Boys born hardly more than a year before are voters. It is a long span of the imagination which reaches back over two decades, to the blood and misery of that terrible time; decades embracing the first sharp pang of a bitter disappointment on one side, the huzzas of victory on the other, the terrible days of reconstruction, of Ku Klux night riders, of citizens deprived of their franchise by bludgeon and bullet, of elections carried by force and returned by fraud, and finally of the tri-umph of a party in national affairs which in the awful struggle of the long ago threw the bulk of its weight on the wrong

We are a long way off from the war. There is not much bitterness left. There ought to be none, for victory for the Union cause had been little better than defeat if the two sections could not come together as one people. If the healing process has seemed slow to a people accustomed to move by the lightning express, we have only to compare our own case with that of other lands plagned by civil strife, and by comparison we can better appreciate our own very great advance on the line of good feeling and restored confidence.

If there be anything yet rankling in the bosoms of me who fought for the Union and of those who sympathized with them, it is that in the lately rebelious section it has not yet come to pass that one man's ballot is as good as another's. Since we are not now deciding with the bullet great questions of public policy, it does not seem unreasonable to expect that full effect shall be given to the ballot. This thought, disappointment rather than hit-terness, is in the minds of men who will today lay the sweet flowers of remembrance on the graves of sleeping comrades.

Veterans who approve the terms of unprecedented magnimity which Grant gave to Lee-one of the proudest decorations of the "Old Commander"-feel that from the other side was due an acquiesin the results of the war would go beyond kindly social relations and generous hospitality and be perceptible at the ballot box. This is not an unreasonable demand, and it is not less than they expected whose graves are to be decorated to-day in memory o their heroic devotion to country.

THE WHISPERING GALLERY.

I have read at least a dozon of the published sketches of the great Frenchman who now lies dead, awaiting burial by the Republic. The sketches tell of the books he has written, of his life, of his warfare he has written, of his life, of his wariare against the classicists. I look in vain for any sign of the heart of the man. Hugo had a great heart or he could not have been what he was to his countrymen. This is why the mere demagogue, though for a time he may mislead, cannot make for himself a permanent place in the regard of mankind. Hugo had this place because he had a heart and was honest.

There was more in one sentence of his own last request to show the great heart of Victor Hugo than in everything I have seen printed about him." He ordered that seen printed about him. He ordered that his remains be carried to the grave in the pauper hearse. A pauper hearse for a king whom France had crowned with her loving homage! The friends of the ragpicker might be stricken with grief to see him carried to his tomb in a pauper hearse. The pauper hearse that carries Victor Hugo's body will be the glory of all France. Always self-conscious, Victor Hugo preserved this quality to the last, and this is why he thought of the pauper hearse. His desire was to ennoble it. Since he could not bring every poor hearse. His desire was to ennoble it. Since he could not bring every poor Frenchman to the level of a Victor Hugo, he chose to let Victor Hugo down to the level of the poorest Frenchman. I'd like to see the Paris crowd when that pauper learns now by with the hones of Victor. hearse goes by with the bones of Victor-Hugo. A Paris crowd is not like any other crowd. It is as apt to be heard as to be seen. There will be a memorable spectacle to 'employ the best pens and pencils of France, and if the Communists don't spoil it with their red-flag doings, the scene will be at once beautiful and in-

A little thing in Victor Hugo's lifeshows the reckless generosity of a young French-man given to letters. When Hugo by a lucky chance found himself possessed of the handsome competency of 700 france the handsome competency of 100 ranes (it takes five of them to make a dollar) he felt that the world was going well with him and he took it into his head to marry. His present to his bride was a cashmere shawl, for which he paid 700 francs. This, I suppose, on the principle that a young couple starting in life must have the luxuries, trusting to fortune for the meaner things. Hugo saw the time when francs came in by the hundred thousand, but I do not think that his example would be a agic one for the young men of our day to follow. This of course does not apply to any undeveloped Victor Hugo who may be modestly lurking about these parts.

I met a Democrat the other day who asked me if I had heard of the new deal at the penitentiary. I told him no; that at the penitentiary. I told him no; that I had been so busy comparing the revised with the authorized version that I had no time to devote to politics and penal institutions. In fact, that since "sheel" had been substituted for something of a harsher sound I wasn't taking on as much as formerly about penal institutions. I'Well," he said, "it isn't 'sheel' that they have been having down at the penitentiary. It's the real undiluted thing of the King James version. You know that the Legislature abolished the position of Commissary, abolishing therewith the incumbent, Brother Martin, the brother-inlaw of our other brother, Col. Joe Gallagher. I can't say whether the thing which has been done was the thing that was intended to be done, but I know what has happened. The Board has given Governor Wilson a chance to repair one of his broken promises. Don't you remember how ex-Sheriff Wilkerson led up the hoats of Wayne and plumped them in solid—20 votes—for Windy Wilson in the Wheeling Convention? Wilkerson led whe wheeling Convention? Wilkerson led of Assistant Superintendent of the penitentiary, but Wilson was under obligations to another ex-Sheriff, Peek, of Logan, and Peek was made Superintendent of the penitentiary, and that's where our friend Wilkerson was pat. The Assistant Superintendent, I believe, is the old Commissary under a new name. There is something of a howl, but I reckon there would have been more if Wilkerson hatn't been I had been so busy comparing the revis-

When Police Sergeant Crowley, of Nev years imprisonment for an assault upon a girl, was led out of the court room to the criminals' van, after receiving his sentence, he passed a group of newspaper men, and to them he said, with an oath, "Now I hope you are satisfied!" Orowley did not intend this as a high tribute to the press, butit was one. He realised the truth—that to the press more than to the enginery of the law he owed his condign panishment. Public opinion is stronger than the law, more to be seared than the abject of prosecutors, keener than the brishtest detective. And the press is its constable, its judge, its ekecutioner. ears imprisonment for an assault upon a

The public can recall cases in which nen have escaped the just penalty of their crimes in the courts, but have had severest justice meted out to them at the severest justice meted out to them at the hands of the press. And, how often in any community have recreant officials been aroused to a sense of duty by the press. The press is in fact but an index of the state of the public mind. A journal may be in advance of public sentiment, but public sentiment is prettly sure to come up abreast of it if it keeps fighting manfully and on the right side. In Crowley's case, the severity of the penalty was largely due to an outraged feeling on the part of the public, voiced and directed by the newspapers. In a community where the hearts of the people were not right the press could not have accomplished so much.
